Von Schirach, One Of Three Spandau Nazis, Gets Eye Surgery

An eye operation in Berlin focused attention again on three major Nazi war criminals who are the only inmates of West Berlin's 600-cell Spandau Prison. The operation was performed at the British Military Hospital on Baldur von Schirach, fifty-seven-year-old former leader of Hitler's youth movement, says the New York Times, who is serving a twenty-year sentence for war crimes.

Von Schirach was taken secretly and under heavy guard from Spandau after physicians representing the United States, British, French, and Soviet prisoners authorities had agreed he should have an operation for a detached retina of the right eye.

Behind the heavy gray iron gates of the 19th-century red-brick prison where he has been for eighteen years, he temporarily left the other two occupants.

They are Rudolf Hess, Hitler's deputy, who is serving a life sentence imposed by the Nuremberg war crimes tribunal in October, 1946; and Albert Speer, the Nazi Minister for Munitions who, like Von Schirach, will complete a twenty-year sentence in October, 1966.

Originally, Spandau Prison under four-power control, housed seven major war criminals sentenced to various terms.

Three died after having been released for reasons of health or old age; and a fourth, former Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz, completed his ten-year sentence.

The three who died were former Foreign Minister Constantin von Neurath, former Grand Adm. Erich Raeder, and former Economics Minister Walther Funk.

Von Schirach is expected to be returned to Spandau from the hospital later this month.

Allied sources have hinted that Hess may be released in October, 1966, since there seems little sense in maintaining the big prison for only one man.

RESENTMENT OVER ISRAEL ARMS WITHDRAWAL DEEPENS ANTI-BONN BOYCOTT IN U.S.

The U.S. State Department expressed disapproval of the boycott of West German goods imposed by some American manufacturers and Jewish groups in retaliation for Bonn's halting of arms shipments to Israel, says the New York Times. The department's position, in line with its traditional policy, was that such actions by private organizations represent an intrusion on the Government's responsibility for carrying out foreign policy.

After a day of deliberation, the department issued this statement about the action of certain clothing manufacturers in suspending purchases of West German goods:

"As a matter of principle, we do not favor private boycotts as a measure of retaliation. This policy applies no matter what the reason or inspiration for such a boycott."

Ambassador Heinrich Knappstein, of West Germany, expressed his Government's concern over the growing boycott during a meeting with Secretary of State Dean Rusk. He apparently received a sympathetic response, for the Ambassador said after the meeting that Mr. Rusk had cited the statement already made by the State Department and suggested he might raise the issue at a future news conference.

Mr. Knappstein also criticized as "unfair and unjust, to say the least" an advertisement by the Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America that appeared in editions of The New York Times. (That full-page advertisement charged that "Germany has begun to turn its back on its moral obligations to the world that its actions threaten world peace, that it has betrayed the very people to whom it owes the greatest moral debt.")

An American company in the apparel field has joined the campaign to curtail imports from West Germany in protest against its suspension of arms shipments to Israel. The head of the concern predicted that others would join, says the New York Times. Michael Daroff, chairman and president of Botany Industries, a diversified group of textile, clothing and retail concerns, ordered his buyers about to leave for Europe to take West Germany off their list in shopping for sportswear. Their orders, he said, might have amounted to "a couple of hundred thousand dollars" this year.

The same policy is being extended throughout the group, he said, and means that it will buy American sewing machines instead of the Pfaff machines it had been thinking of ordering from West Germany.

From the labor side of the apparel field, Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, A.F.L.-C.I.O., appealed to organized labor in West Germany to urge the Government to reverse the decision ending the shipments under an $80 million program that was about eighty per cent completed.

In a telegram to the secretary of the Deutscher Gewerkschaftsbund, he said any disturbance of the current balance of power in the Middle East "could become an invitation to war." He expressed confidence that the West German Government "will want to serve the cause of peace and democracy by fulfilling its commitments to Israel."

Mr. Daroff said he was taking his actions on his own initiative because "we are not going to do business with anyone who lets himself be blackmailed by any dictator", says the New York Times. He was alluding to pressure on West Germany from President Gamal Abdel Nasser, of the United Arab Republic, to end the flow of arms to Israel. Mr. Daroff added that he understood that his own companies had long been blacklisted by the United Arab Republic.

"I've lost my respect for the West German Government," he said. "I think any American, Jewish or not, would take the same stand."

He said he had received many telephone calls and letters from Jews and non-Jews complimenting him on his stand. He predicted that other American concerns, including some not owned by Jews, would quietly take similar action.

Two American men's shirt manufacturers have cancelled orders with suppliers in West Germany in reaction to the Bonn government's suspension of arms shipment to Israel as a result of Egyptian pressure.

Lawrence Phillips, executive vice-president of Phillips Van Heusen Corp., said the company had cancelled all outstanding orders for German piece goods, finished goods and machinery. The company, which does an annual volume of $83 million, uses West Germany as one of its suppliers of velour, says the New York Herald Tribune, which is currently an important fashion fabric.

Harvey Rothenberg, president of Philip Rothenberg & Co., a multi-million-dollar shirt producer, said that he had cancelled orders for Alpicella cotton flannels with two West German suppliers. These commitments, he said, were in excess of $50,000. The firm is also in the process of reviewing machinery commitments to West Germany.

In a letter to Weber & Ott A. G., one of the two West German suppliers, Mr. Rothenberg said he "resents very keenly the recent announcement which indicated that West Germany had succumbed to the vicious propaganda blasts of Nasser's United Arab Republic by summarily cancelling its arms contracts with Israel.

"For Germany to succumb to Nasser's pressure and stop its arms shipments is, to me, a tremendous setback for the democratization of West Germany," he continued, says the New York Herald Tribune. "Israel is a bastion of strength for the Western world, and, as such, should be supported by those to whom democracy means something."

The growing boycott of West Germany's goods and services in protest against its halt in arms shipments to Israel is being discussed at meetings of major Jewish groups, says the New York Times. The issue will come up at the meeting of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, composed

Prime Minister Of Israel Raises Spectre Of Germany's Blood-Stained Past: "An Account Still Pending Between The Jewish People And The German People, Written In Blood"

Levi Eshkol, the Prime Minister of Israel, insisted that the Bonn Government honour fully its undertakings to supply arms. "No compensation or monetary substitutes can exempt Germany from this duty, says the London Times. The realization of Germany's aspirations to cleanse herself of her bloodstained past hinged on her relations with the Jewish state, he said in the Knesset.

The Prime Minister's speech opened a debate on relations with Germany after Bonn's reversal of its policy of military aid to Israel. Mr. Eshkol said that relations between the two countries should be reappraised in the light of recent developments. There are no diplomatic relations at present but Israel has a mission in Cologne which organizes purchases under the 1952 agreement for reparations for Nazi crimes.

Mr. Eshkol attacked the Erhard Government for retreating under threats from Egypt from the Adenauer Government's undertakings to help strengthen and consolidate the Jewish state in various ways.

The Erhard Government's action was particularly grave because German scientists were still working in Egypt, helping President Nasser to develop rockets. "I cannot fail to point out the flagrant contrast between Bonn's haste this time in taking action to halt arms dispatches to areas of tension and the sluggishness it has displayed in its response to the Israel demand for effective action for the withdrawal of scientists from Egypt", the Prime Minister said angrily.

After four hours' debate the Knesset, by fifty-four votes to twenty-six, adopted a resolution that the German Government should fulfil its obligations to Israel and endorsed the Government's decision to reject financial compensation for the cancelled arms deliveries, says the London Times. Opposition motions calling for a complete break with Bonn were defeated.

Mr. Eshkol rejected outright monetary aid to replace the arms aid. He urged West Germany to fulfill its "moral obligations" to Israel and warned against "yielding to (President) Nasser's blackmail, which will only lead to further extortion by Egypt."

The Israel Government had withheld official comment on the German decision, pending publication of a formal announcement from Bonn. The general mood in Tel Aviv was one of bitterness against West Germany, precluding any readiness to understand her position, says the London Times. The press said that the Israel Government would spurn any Bonn offer of cash compensation for undelivered arms.

Mr. Ben-Gurion, the former Prime Minister, however, caused eyebrows to raise at a luncheon of the Foreign Press Association when he said that he did not believe that there was really a crisis between Bonn and Israel. He recalled that the United States placed an embargo on arms supplies to Israel when Arab states attacked her. He added: "I did not like it, but I did not hate America."

The Federal Government announced that there would be no more arms deliveries to areas of political tension; the Egyptians had been told that there must be no visit to Cairo by Herr Ulbricht, the East German leader; and Bonn expressly retained complete freedom over its future relations with Israel.

It was Dr. Erhard, the Chancellor, speaking at a foreign correspondents' luncheon, who at last broke the Government's embarrassed silence about arms deliveries to Israel under the 1960 agreement.

Government officials said afterwards that arms deliveries had already stopped and that the Cabinet's decision would be applied to the countries of the Middle East. The officials refused to say whether the ban on arms deliveries would apply to African or other countries.

Dr. Erhard defended the Hallstein doctrine, with which the Federal Republic upholds its right to be the sole legitimate representative of the German people, and gave a warning of the consequences of disregarding this claim, obviously directed at any other countries who might be tempted to follow in President Nasser's footsteps, and invite Herr Ulbricht.

After describing him as the most hated man in both parts of Germany, the Chancellor said that whenever such unfriendly acts against the vital interests of German people occurred, says the London Times, the Federal Government would have no alternative but to review its political and economic relations with the countries concerned.

Herr von Hase, State Secretary in the Federal Press Office, said that only a cancellation of Herr Ulbricht's visit to Cairo, then foreseen for later this month, or an indefinite postponement would suffice if Bonn's relations with the United Arab Republic were not to be disturbed.

He also said that any attempt to downgrade the invitation from a state visit to a courtesy visit would still incur Bonn's displeasure — and an appropriate reaction was to be expected.

Dr. Erhard said that Bonn was negotiating with the Israel Government on how to fulfil the remainder of the DM.32m. (about £29m.) agreement on arms deliveries, about 80 per cent of which is reported to have been fulfilled. Germany, he said, would not break her agreements. He left open the possibility that either civilian items or credits would be supplied instead.

The Federal Government appealed to Israel for an understanding of its position; it argued that the interests of Jewish people would not be served by an expansion of the Communist influence in the Middle East.

Israel, Herr von Hase said, had been given to the Egyptians that Bonn would not establish diplomatic relations with Tel Aviv. A suggestion, by the Marqués de Nerva, the Spanish diplomatist who has mediated for Bonn in Cairo, that such a promise had been given was broadcast by the West German television.

The Federal Government showed its displeasure with the Spaniard, who reported on his mission, by letting him be received by Dr. Carstens, State Secretary in the Foreign Ministry, and not by Dr. Schröder, the Foreign Minister, or the Chancellor, as had been expected.

The German press takes a highly critical view of the Government's Middle East policy, mostly putting the blame, however, on Dr. Adenauer who was Chancellor when the original arms agreement was concluded, says the London Times. The bitterest comment of all comes from the Social Democratic Party press service which refers to the present situation as a "diplomatic Stalingrad" for Germany.

The Board of Deputies of British Jews, the representative body of British Jewry, said that it was deeply concerned by reports that the Federal Government had yielded to pressure by the Nasser Government and terminated deliveries of arms to Israel.

"Jews can never forget the slaughter of six million of their people by the Nazis. Germany continues to bear a heavy load of responsibility before civilized mankind", said a statement. A German government which was prepared to sacrifice Israel's vital needs would be condemned by all men of good will, it added.

Almost 24 hours after the declaration by Ali Sabry, the Egyptian Prime Minister, in Parliament that the German Federal Government had stopped all arms deliveries to Israel, there was still no official reaction or confirmation available in Bonn. But the feverish consultations in progress at the Chancellery and in Parliament through the day underlined the confusion and embarrassment provoked in Government circles.

Ostensibly, the Federal Government was waiting for the report of the Marqués de Nerva, the Spanish negotiator, who arrived in Bonn, putting forward its own point of view officially. But some well-informed sources maintain, that there would be no comment even when the report was available, because the Government could hardly admit that it had decided to stop military aid to Israel when it has never publicly acknowledged its existence.

Dr. Gerstenmaier, president of the Bundestag, confirmed news agency reports of the Egyptian Prime Minister's statement. Dr. Gerstenmaier, who has taken an active interest in the Middle East policy of the Government ever since his semi-official mediation mission to Cairo last November, says the London Times, felt it incumbent on someone to put German and world opinion right on the latest twist in the meandering and perplexed policy of the Government.

This, after repeated hesitations and contradictions, appears to have ended in a unilateral and undignified retreat on the part of Bonn before growing threats from Cairo. It is, independent observers emphasize, a sad commentary on almost unbelievably clumsy attempts to try to keep friends with each side which have resulted in antagonizing both.

There was no indication that the Federal Government insisted upon any concession from Cairo as a counterpart to its wholesale retreat. If the Egyptian Prime Minister's declaration that Bonn had decided to cease arms deliveries permanently — and not merely provisionally — true, it is difficult to see what means the German Government reserved itself of obtaining something from President Nasser in return. There is always the possibility that the Egyptian Government had chosen to exaggerate the scope of the German concession in order to give more significance to the diplomatic victory it has won.

But the foreign affairs committee of the Bundestag, which sat all day and far into the night, is understood to have agreed in principle to a provisional suspension of arms deliveries in order to allow the Government time to observe the reactions of the U.A.R. and the other Arab states before committing itself irrevocably to a final suspension. It is more than possible, however, that things were fumbled by Bonn, and that Cairo was given the excuse for pressing its advantage just a little further.

It was being emphasized that the arms deliveries by the Federal Republic to Israel under the 1960 agreement between Dr. Adenauer and the former Israel Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion — which was never set out in any formal document — are almost 80 per cent fulfilled. What is already on the way is understood to consist of non-military supplies, says the London Times. Still to be dealt with are additional deliveries to the value of some DM.320m. (£29m.), which Dr. Erhard is reported to have authorized last autumn.

These will certainly be halted. The Federal Government will take every step, however, to ensure that Israel gets the credits for a corresponding amount so that it can make arrangements to obtain the war materials it requires from other sources. The Chancellor gave this undertaking to the head of the Israel Mission, Dr. Shinnar, outlining to him the policy the Federal Government had been compelled to adopt to avoid driving all the Arab states into the east German camp.

The suspension of arms to Israel solves nothing but President Nasser's immediate threat to break off diplomatic relations with Bonn if this was not decided immediately. It creates a new crisis with Israel and does not dispose of the long-term problem — as crucial as ever for the future of German policy in the Middle East — raised by the visit of Herr Ulbricht to Cairo at the end of this month. The reception by President Nasser of the arch-enemy of the Federal Republic and of German reunification, a leading German politician told the London Times, is bound to weigh heavily on German-Egyptian relations.

Now that the arms issue has been disposed of, however, unsatisfactorily, the diplomacy of the Federal Government will concentrate on making a last attempt to persuade President Nasser to postpone his invitation, or at the very least to give the visit as quiet a character as possible. The return of the U.A.R. Ambassador to Bonn is regarded as a favourable omen.

But the fact will remain that the Hallstein doctrine of the Federal Republic's claim alone to represent the whole of Germany has been stretched almost to breaking point; and President Nasser has demonstrated that blatant pressure on Bonn succeeds. What, it is being asked, is to prevent him from staging a repeat performance on some other excuse in six months' or a year's time; or to discourage

MARRIAGES

EICHLER-SPEAR

The marriage of Miss Eleanor Spear, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Spear, 1757 Hartenstein Street, to Harry Eichler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Markus Eichler, 6762 Clanranald Avenue, was solemnized at Beth Ora Synagogue, on Sunday, July 26, at seven o'clock, by Dr. Chaim N. Her tulle illusion veil was attached to a seed-pearl-beaded crown; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids. Mrs. Ben Bedzow, sister of the groom, was matron of honour. She wore a sleeveless gown of gold-coloured, beaded, peau de soie, made with a straight skirt; also a matching hat; and carried American-Beauty roses. DINA LIVES ALONE, BUT NEAR HER BROTHER, AND LIKES J.D.C. PLAN

In a way Dina Vardi was lucky. She had come to Israel in January, 1964, a few years after Malben had developed a new approach to care of the aged. This provided for aid to the well aged to enable them to live independently in the community rather than in one of the old age homes. The homes were to be used mainly for those who needed institutional care, the infirm, and the chronically ill.

For the well aged there are many possibilities. A small apartment in an urban community where Dina might find work in keeping with her years and her capabilities. Perhaps a furnished room with a family. Or a larger apartment and financial support to enable her to live with her only surviving relative, a younger brother with whom she was reunited after sixteen years of separation. Dina Vardi's case is just one of many that are discussed at Malben's weekly admissions committee meetings. With Dina there were the usual problems but, thanks to the cooperation of the Jewish Agency and Government authorities, they were speedily solved.

Malben is the welfare program on behalf of aged, ill, and handicapped immigrants, maintained in Israel by the Joint Distribution Committee, with funds from the United Jewish Appeal. The Jewish Agency, which cooperates with JDC-Malben in the extra-mural program for the aged, also receives its funds from the United Jewish Appeal.

At first Dina stayed with her brother but everyone agreed it could not work. A teen-age niece was reluctant to share her room with an aunt she had never known. The non-religious sister-in-law found the newcomer's deep religious observances an inconvenience. Dina felt like an intruder. The social worker for the Jewish Agency, aware of the problem, referred Dina to JDC-Malben. After a brief discussion, the admissions committee agreed that Dina would be better off living in a small apartment of her own.

Malben would finance half of the cost of moving her into a fully equipped apartment and the Jewish Agency would provide the balance. The apartment would be near her brother to allow her to maintain contact with him. Her husband and daughter were victims of the Nazi slaughter. She will receive an old age pension from the State and her brother will provide a small monthly allowance. Free medical care will be provided by Malben.

In less than three months Dina Vardi was in her own apartment. She kept herself busy learning Hebrew, baby-sitting, and getting to know her neighbors, many of whom also came from Eastern Europe. Dina is no longer lonely. She is contented and enjoys being on her own. She knows that if her asthma or her arthritis gets worse and makes her an invalid, that there will be a place for her in a Malben nursing home.

There are many hundreds of such old people who have found their little niche in the community. For them it is a satisfying niche, offering greater opportunities for social contact and for finding part-time work to supplement their modest incomes. Integrating the well aged in the community is less costly to the community than even the best run institution. It has the added advantage of making additional bed space available for the infirm and nursing cases. And finally, Israel's old people prefer it. It helps them feel like full-time, contributing and working members of the community, doing their share to build their country.

RESENTMENT OVER ISRAEL ARMS WITHDRAWAL

of leaders of twenty major American Jewish secular and religious groups. The larger group deals with issues on the international scene, including those involving Israel and the status of Jews in other lands.

Among other steps that will be discussed is the possibility of official representations to Washington and Bonn, as well as proposals for mass protest demonstrations by American Jews, it was indicated.

Dr. Joachim Prinz, newly elected chairman of the group, criticized the West German Government for "its failure to discharge its special and enduring responsibility for the safety and security of the surviving victims of Nazism."

Dr. Prinz, a Reform rabbi, was expelled from Nazi Germany in 1937.

In expressing the hope that the last word on the subject had not been spoken, he called on the Bonn regime "to fulfill its pledge to Israel" rather than surrender to the "blackmail threat" by President Gamal Abdel Nasser, of the United Arab Republic, who has taken steps toward recognition of East Germany.

The Jewish War Veterans of the United States of America, in a paid advertisement in The New York Times, deplored the West German action. The veterans' group also scored the West German Government for its "utter failure" to recall West German scientists — "most of them Nazis," the group said — from the United Arab Republic, where they have been working "in the fields of aviation and rocketry, a threat to world peace."

The New York Board of Rabbis sent a letter to the West German Embassy in Washington, expressing "shock and chagrin", says the New York Times, over the "surrender of the German Government to Egypt under threat of blackmail."

Labor Leaders Here Urge Germans To Press For Extension

David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, and Jacob Potofsky, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, have urged the leaders of the German trade unions and Social Democratic Party to take vigorous action to win extension of the Statute of Limitations on the prosecution of Nazi criminals. The labor leaders signed a cable that was sent by the Jewish Labor Committee to Willy Brandt, leader of the Social Democratic Party and Ludwig Rosenberg, president of the West German trade union federation. Others who signed the message were Adolph Held, Nathan Chanin, Benjamin Tabachinsky, and Emanuel Muravchik.

The German statute of limitations governing the indictment of Nazi criminals is due to expire on May 8, 1965. Voices have been raised in Germany and throughout the world asking for its extension so that no Nazi criminals should escape justice. On January 14 all major American Jewish organizations, including the Jewish Labor Committee, demonstrated in front of West German Consulates in the U.S. demanding that the statute be extended.

The wire signed by the American labor leaders stated: "As you know the Jewish Labor Committee is most profoundly concerned about the Statute of Limitations question. It is unthinkable that Nazis, many or few, who took part in Hitler's genocide program should escape trial. Germany's refusal to extend the date would create the greatest consternation among American Jews, trade unionists, and others. We urge the Social Democratic Party and the German trade unions to take the most vigorous action possible to win extension of the statute. Information on your views and actions will be greatly appreciated."

PRIME MINISTER OF ISRAEL RAISES SPECTRE OF PAST

other Arab countries from following his example?

As long as Bonn continues to support Israel to the fullest extent compatible with relations with the Arab block countries — as it must both by moral necessity and under strong American prompting — and holds fast to the Hallstein doctrine, it remains permanently vulnerable to the threat of recognition of the east German regime.

The Prime Minister's statement on the ending of German arms deals with Israel was hailed in the Egyptian press as a victory for President Nasser. Observers are convinced that the U.A.R. has made concessions to Bonn over the visit of the east German leader, Herr Ulbricht. The concession is widely held to be an assurance that he will not be received as a head of state.

For nearly nineteen years the four powers have taken monthly turns in supplying the prison guards. This month about thirty French soldiers are on duty. They man the seven watch-towers along the ten-foot wall topped with barbed wire, which surrounds the compound, says the New York Times. Inside a permanent staff of twenty civilian guards looks after the three inmates, whose daily routine begins with cleaning their cells and making their beds at 7 A.M.

THE ISOLATION OF ISRAEL

The Toronto Star says:

Bonn's decision to renege on an arms deal with Israel is the latest of the successes the Arab states have gained in their efforts to strangle their neighbor.

Winning this success proved to be ridiculously simple. Knowing the sensitive nerve of West Germany's foreign policy, Egypt let Bonn know that when East Germany's Communist boss Ulbricht comes on a visit late this month, it might recognize his regime. "However," the Egyptians said in effect, "we might drop this idea if you drop your arms deal with Israel." Whatever moral obligations Bonn may have felt toward the Jews, it promptly caved in.

Signed some 3½ years ago, the contract would have provided Israel with $80 millions' worth of military hardware over five years. Only half of this is still to be delivered.

To Israel, however, it looms huge. Canadians, living under the umbrella of U.S. power and allied to other strong military powers, can hardly appreciate the constant and desperate insecurity which haunts the Israelis.

A member of no alliance and recipient of no military aid, Israel depends for its safety on whatever arms it may be able to buy from a shrinking number of suppliers.

With the Soviet bloc continuing to put guns into Arab hands, there is a danger of a new crisis in the area — with all the risks of a conflict involving the major powers.

While the Arab bloc headed by Nasser's Egypt evidently does not seek an early military showdown, it has discovered other highly effective ways to isolate and weaken Israel.

At the request of their Arab members 45 "non-aligned" nations meeting in Cairo last fall aligned themselves against Israel. Only a few weeks later, Israel found itself barred from the 77-member committee of underdeveloped states at the United Nations. Bonn has declined to do anything to stop German scientists building rockets and bombers for Egypt, or to establish full diplomatic relations with Israel next year. Other Western nations including Israel's staunchest friend, France, have shown reluctance to exchange trade concessions with Israel, for fear of losing out in the more populous Arab markets.

Giving guns to either side in the Middle East is obviously no durable answer to the problem. The best assurance of peace there would be a joint guarantee of frontiers by the United States and the Soviet Union.

Regrettably, this is not about to happen, because Moscow finds it too profitable to play along with the Arabs. And a feeble Israel would invite its own destruction.

The West can hardly forget that this tiny sanctuary on the edge of Asia is in a way a moral debt paid for the butchery of millions of Jews. We cannot in good conscience sacrifice it to our need for friendship with the Arabs.

Congress Letter To German Ambassador Here Urges Reversal Of Arms To Israel Decision

Michael Garber, Q.C., president of Canadian Jewish Congress, addressed the following letter to Dr. Kurt Oppler, the Ambassador of West Germany, in Ottawa:

"There is now wide public knowledge that the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany has decided to suspend all shipment of arms to the State of Israel. The reasons for this decision apparently rise out of the pressures exerted on your Government by the Government of the United Arab Republic which has threatened, among other things, to recognize the Government of the Peoples' Republic of East Germany unless such shipments to Israel are stopped.

The Canadian Jewish Congress feels impelled to communicate to you our disturbed feeling at this decision of your Government and to ask you to be good enough to so advise it.

We speak on behalf of approximately 260,000 Canadian Jews, among whom are many who suffered personal tragedies during the Hitler years in Europe and in the post-war D.P. period. Our Jewish community has a close kinship not only with other Jewish communities throughout the world but a very special one with the Jewish people in Israel who symbolize for us the dignity of a re-created people. Furthermore, the Canadian Jewish Congress was one of that group of organizations who negotiated with your Government and with whom the agreement on reparations was finally made.

Your country gained stature in the eyes of the world in 1952 when it agreed to make financial reparation to Israel — symbol of the Jewish people — in a partial redress of the wrongs committed.

These thirteen years, during which your government has fulfilled the obligations it then undertook, have dealt kindly with you. But the sign of moral weakness shown in your withdrawal of aid in arms to Israel, disturbs not only our Jewish people but every objective person and nation for whom morality and ethics have any meaning.

The constant threat of war against Israel, openly stated by its Arab neighbours especially in the U.A.R., has had a great adverse effect not only in Israel but on Jewish communities throughout the world who fear for the peace of Israel.

We express the hope that your Government will reconsider its policy and redress this wrong, too."

CARDINAL LEGER, ARCHBISHOP OF MONTREAL, HONOURS TEMPLE AS FIRST PRINCE OF CATHOLIC CHURCH IN CANADIAN HISTORY TO RECEIVE SYNAGOGUE CITATION

His Eminence Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger, Archbishop of Montreal, was given the Brotherhood of Temple Emanu-El Award of Merit at the thirty-eighth annual conclave of Catholics, Jews, and Protestants when The Hon. Paul Martin, P.C., M.P., Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada, was guest speaker on the international situation. Five hundred guests were present. It was the first time in Canadian history that a Prince of the Catholic Church in North America was given a citation by a Synagogue.

Dr. Harry J. Stern, Rabbi of the Temple, expressed gratitude to Mr. Martin and presented him with the gift of a mounted Shofar, a ram's horn, which bore the inscription from Leviticus, Chapter 25: "Proclaim ye liberty unto all the inhabitants of the land."

In paying tribute to Cardinal Leger, the Rabbi spoke of him as a friend and religious leader who helped to make Montreal a community where goodwill dominated. He recalled that it was with the Cardinal's consent that the historic interfaith service, the first of its kind where Rabbi Stern, representing the Jewish community; the late Rev. Dr. Norman Rawson, representing the Protestant community; and Most Rev. Paul Gregoire, Auxiliary Bishop of Montreal, representing the Catholic faith; participated, at St. Joseph's Shrine, on October 25. Memorable, too, the Rabbi said was the Cardinal's stand taken at the Second Ecumenical when he associated himself with the Catholics and Jews and between Protestants and Catholics. The Rabbi presented the Cardinal with the Jerusalem Bible, printed both in Hebrew and in English, which has been issued in Israel, and then read the citation indicating the Brotherhood Award of Merit which says:

"We express to your Eminence, our deep appreciation of your career as a religious leader within Canada and beyond the borders of our beloved land. True to the teachings of the great Hebrew prophets, you have battled against poverty and misery and labored unceasingly in the cause of social justice and righteousness.

"As adherents of Judaism, the Mother faith of Christianity, we have been especially impressed by your courageous action and utterances as one of the leaders of progressive thought among the Fathers of the Second Vatican Council, that resulted in the historic declaration regarding Catholic-Jewish relations, which schema, when promulgated, we hope, will contribute significantly to the elimination of anti-Semitism, and toward the ending of the Christian-Jewish tragedy of nearly nineteen hundred years.

"We are inspired by your philosophy of living as manifested in your striving for ecumenism and increased understanding and toward that larger horizon, the sincerest hope of all men of faith, when mankind will give assent to the Hebrew prophet's challenging question: 'Have we not all one father? Hath not One God created us?' (Malachi II:10).

"We pray that in the years that be ahead, God grant you vigor of mind and body to continue your dedicated ministry, so that your hopes for organized religion in building the world community of brotherhood, under the Fatherhood of God, find speedy fulfillment."

This citation was signed by Rabbi Stern, and by William Hoffman, Brotherhood president, in Montreal, Canada; 1 Adar 15, 5725, February 17, 1965.

Mr. Hoffman presided. The invocation was pronounced by Alex Carsley, honorary president of Temple Brotherhood, and member of the board of trustees. Special thanks for the arrangement of the dinner meeting, went to: Murray Deakin, Alex Carsley, Jack Engels, David Metrick, Robert Claymon, Hershell H. Lewis; and to Samuel Wechsler, honorary trustee of the Temple, who prepared the mounting of the Shofar, the ram's horn, which was presented to Mr. Martin.

Prior to the dinner meeting, head table guests assembled in the Temple sanctuary for a brief time of prayer. Dr. Stern ascended the Altar accompanied by His Eminence Paul-Emile Cardinal Leger, and Mr. Martin, and before the Open Ark offered a prayer for the welfare of Government and the land of Canada and that religion may strengthen the bonds of Brotherhood among citizens of every race.

Others at the head table were: Alfred N. Miller, president of the Temple; The Hon. Charles M. Drury, M.P., Minister of Industry; Hyman Grover, honorary president of the Temple; The Hon. Excerpts From Statement In The Israeli Knesset By Prime Minister Eshkol On Relations With Germany

". . . Every country that aims at the advancement of peace in our area and in the world as a whole, must look with favour on the preservation of our defensive power and regard with grave concern anything that might weaken the balance of deterrence. If this applies to the countries of the world in general, Germany must face a special responsibility of unexampled gravity.

Here the fundamental duty to advance world peace is reinforced by a unique fabrique of memories which call forth eternal mourning, anger, and grief in the hearts of the Jewish people. The whole of this generation lives in the shadow of the holocaust.

In the light of this historic background, the German people and its leaders ought to be meticulous in their obedience to certain clear moral imperatives. It is Germany's primary moral duty to make every possible contribution to the strengthening of Israel and she must not on any account be led into any action whatsoever that is liable to weaken Israel's security.

The whole of civilized humanity rightly tends to judge and evaluate the extent to which Germany has liberated herself from the burden of the past by her actions in the sphere of relations with Israel and the Jewish people. It is also natural to regard Germany's policy towards Israel as the touchstone for her aspiration to find her place in the family of nations as a factor for world peace and stability.

It may be assumed that this was the decisive consideration that moved Chancellor Adenauer's Government to lay down his country's attitude in regard to Germany's duty to make a serious contribution to the strengthening and consolidation of Israel in various fields. For several years the Government of Western Germany displayed a favourable approach to the vital needs of the State of Israel which is struggling for existence and consolidation.

Nevertheless the account still pending between the Jewish people and the German people, an account written in blood, goes far beyond the limits of the political and material spheres. Behind us lie sufferings for which there can be no atonement, which can not be obliterated from the consciousness of this generation.

Now came the statement from Bonn and it is no wonder that there has been an indignant reaction in Israel among the Jewish people, and in the world at large. From these statements and from direct talks that have taken place in Bonn, it appears that there is a tendency to retreat from the faithful observance of express undertakings which Israel has already taken into account in developing her defensive readiness.

From Israel's point of view, this decision by the Bonn Government is of double gravity. The decision is grave on its own merits because of its results, but it is even graver in the light of the motives that produced it.

Any surrender to this blackmail seems particularly strange in the light of the fact that experience has shown that any Government which refused to allow the Arab rulers to dictate the content or spirit of its relations with a third party, safeguards its own position of strength and respect in the family of nations in general, and in this area in particular.

Surrender is not only wrong from the point of view of practical advantage. Blackmail leads to further blackmail. The descent is steep and there is no end to it. The decision of the West German Government is based on the principle of not supplying arms to areas of tension.

It is strange that Western Germany which itself lies in an area of the most delicate tension, exploits this concept as a reason for the non-supply of security aid to Israel. Moreover there is not the slightest basis for this definition. It is not the question of an objective state of tension between two parties but of threats and preparations for aggression against Israel by the Arab States.

It is the situation resulting from this Arab policy that established Israel's right to receive aid to strengthen her security and the duty of peace-loving States to make her contribution to this end.

I cannot fail to point out the flagrant contrast between the Bonn Government's haste at this time in taking action to halt arms dispatches to areas of tension and the sluggishness it has displayed in its response to Israel's demand for effective action for the withdrawal of the scientists from Egypt.

And on the plane of the relations between Israel and Germany, let it be perfectly plain and open: Germany's duty is to help Israel with the equipment necessary for her security and no compensation or monetary substitutes alone can exempt Germany from this duty. We shall accept no compensation in return for the cancellation of the promised security aid."
